

Snow-white and Rose-red: A Tale of Two Sister

Once upon a time, in a cozy cottage nestled near a lush forest, lived a kind widow with her two daughters. The older daughter, with hair as white as snow, was gentle and soft-spoken, named Snow-white. The younger, with cheeks as rosy as the reddest bloom, was lively and spirited, and she was called Rose-red.

Their cottage garden bloomed with two rose bushes, one white and one red, reflecting the unique beauty of each sister. The siblings shared an unbreakable bond, promising always to stay by each other's side, come what may. They were inseparable companions, sharing both joys and sorrows.

Snow-white found joy in helping her mother with household chores, quietly humming melodies while tidying up or cooking. Rose-red, on the other hand, was a bundle of energy, always eager to explore the meadows, chase butterflies, and pick wildflowers.

Despite their different natures, they both had hearts filled with kindness and love. They befriended the animals of the forest, who felt safe in their presence. The gentle deer, the hopping rabbits, even the birds would rest on their shoulders, singing songs of nature's beauty.

One day, while playing in the forest, they encountered a magnificent sight - a child in a shining white dress, glowing like a star, who disappeared as mysteriously as he appeared. That night, they realized they had been saved from a hidden danger by this mysterious child, whom their mother believed was an angel watching over good children.

Their life was simple but filled with happiness until one winter evening, an unexpected visitor arrived. A knock at their door revealed not a man in need, but a large, black bear! While fear initially gripped them, the bear spoke gently, asking only for a warm place to rest. Compassion overcame their fear, and they welcomed the bear into their home.

The bear soon became their beloved friend. Each evening, he would arrive, playfully letting the children comb his fur and share stories by the fire. When spring arrived, the bear had to leave, promising to return. As he left, Snow-white noticed something strange - a glint of gold beneath his fur.

Summer turned to autumn, and the sisters had another strange encounter - this time with a grumpy dwarf, whose beard was stuck under a tree. Despite their best efforts to help, the dwarf was ungrateful and rude. Yet, in a series of events, they found themselves rescuing the same dwarf again and again, each time facing his unkind words.

Their kindness never wavered, but the dwarf's ingratitude seemed endless. Then, one fateful day, while helping the dwarf from a bear, a stunning revelation came to light. The bear, their winter friend, was no bear at all, but a prince cursed by the dwarf! With the dwarf's defeat, the curse was broken, and the prince returned to his true form.

In a twist of fate, Snow-white found love with the prince, and Rose-red with his brother, a noble knight. The two sisters, who shared every joy and sorrow, now shared their happiness in a grand double wedding. The widow, with her rose bushes, moved to the palace, and they all lived together in joy and harmony.

The roses in the palace garden, white and red, bloomed more beautifully than ever, symbolizing the unbreakable bond between Snow-white and Rose-red - a bond that not only brought them joy but also turned their kindness into a fairy-tale ending.
